BIG TICKET

After two years of category disruption, luxury is set for its biggest ever bounce back. According to Future Laboratory analysts, by 2025, the global luxury market could reach €370bn, an increase of €150bn since 2020.

JCDecaux enables brands to revitalise, reconnect with 'luxuriants' and shape a brighter luxury sector future.

So, what does today's, and tomorrow's luxury buyer look like? They are younger, open-minded, socially aware, stylish, technologically engaged and adventurous. We know them well - they are creators, curators, brokers, foodies, change makers and early adopters, always on the hunt for the latest products, services and experiences and they're willing to pay for quality.

From retail and automotive, to jewellery and fashion, a glance at some of the campaigns appearing across JCDecaux platforms right now, demonstrates that our network is the perfect place to inspire big ticket moments.

THE LUXURY CATEGORY HAS TYPICALLY BEEN ASSOCIATED WITH EXCLUSIVITY AND EXTRAVAGANCE.

But as younger consumers represent a greater share of the luxury market and the industry becomes more inclusive and attainable, these perceptions are evolving; the sector is beginning to incorporate the more light-hearted, laid-back and value-based views of its younger buyers. Bain and Company estimates that millennials and Gen Z will contribute 130% of market growth between now and 2025.

Shared attitudes offer a stronger characterisation of luxury buyers than financial qualities like purchasing power:

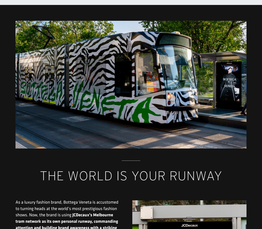
Buyers stand out for being ambitious, fashion-conscious and risk-takers - a sign aspirational triggers will continue to drive impulsive purchases.

Buyers are more likely than average to describe themselves as adventurous (46% v 39%) and like exploring the world (64% vs 59%).

These shoppers are distinguished by their desire to stand out in a crowd, their interest in influencers, and an above-average tendency to use social media to post about their lives.



THE WORLD IS YOUR RUNWAY

As a luxury fashion brand, Bottega Veneta is accustomed to turning heads at the world's most prestigious fashion shows. Now, the brand is using JCDecaux's Melbourne tram network as its own personal runway, commanding attention and building brand awareness with a striking zebra-print Tram Wrap to launch its tailor-fit collection.

To support the wrap and our Tram Wrap, Bottega Veneta is leveraging JCDecaux SmartFrames across Sydney and Melbourne. Given the insight that in-store, the brand's customers typically spend around 30 minutes browsing, Bottega Veneta is rotating a series of 10 creatives, each showcasing a look from their new collection, to target its growing younger customer base and drive consumers into the Bottega Veneta flagship stores.

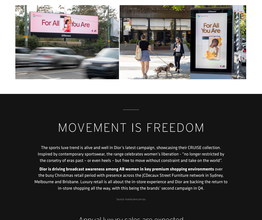
FOR ALL WE ARE

Google is shaking up the smartphone category with the release of its latest model, the Pixel 6. To differentiate from competitors and align with the company's recent push towards promoting diversity and inclusivity, the premium handset contains 'Real Tone', a feature designed to properly represent skin tones which are often over-brightened or unnaturally saturated – issues predominantly affecting people of colour.

To launch with impact, and drive consideration in a highly competitive category, Google partnered with JCDecaux to deliver a multi-format, national campaign, appearing across JCDecaux Street Furniture, Large Format and 6Tracks.



MOVEMENT IS FREEDOM

The sports luxe trend is alive and well in Dior's latest campaign, showcasing their CRUISE collection. Inspired by contemporary sportswear, the range celebrates women's liberation – "no longer restricted by the concerns of ways past – or even future – but free to move without constraint and take on the world".

Dior is driving broadcast awareness among AB women in key premium shopping environments over the busy Christmas retail period with presence across the JCDecaux Street Furniture network in Sydney, Melbourne and Brisbane. Luxury retail is all about the in-store experience and Dior are backing the return to in-store shopping all the way, with this being the brands' second campaign in Q4.
